Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The March of Medicine At the same time that Virchow was laying the foundations of pathology in Germany, Pasteur developed the germ theory in France. Pasteur was a chemist and in that field his earlier studies led him to the discovery that putrefaction is a kind of fermentation and that both these processes are due to micro-organisms. He showed that the disease of wine which plagued the wine industry in France was due to the action of microbes and that by heating the wine for a short time to a temperature between 50 and 60 the fermenting agent could be destroyed while the wine would remain unaltered and would keep indefinitely. This process is well known under the name, pasteurization. A name equal in importance to that of Pasteur in the science of bacteriology is that of Robert Koch. This district physician in a small Prussian town. His thoughtful gave him a microscope on his 28th birthday. We owe him a great debt for Koch went to work studying anthrax, a disease common among the sheep and cattle of his agricultural district and initiated a series of investigations which revealed the causes of a great number of diseases, including tuberculosis. Before the end of the 19th century there had been discovered the cause of gonorrhea, suppuration, typhoid fever, malaria, and certain types of pneumonia, cerebrospinal meningitis, tetanus or lockjaw, plague, botulism and dysentery.
