Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Soil Sampling for Pore Space and Percolation: Field and Laboratory Procedures The sampler used at the Piedmont Research Center is shown in figures 1 and 2. This sampler holds a copper cylinder in which the soil is collected. It is driven by impact using the 12 to 16 pound hammer illustrated in the figures. Because the hammer is mounted on a rod which slides inside the sampler handle, the sampler can be driven with a minimum of wobble. Generally, when sampling heavy soils one man guides the sampler while another man uses the hammer. A heavy hammer avoids some of the jarring and breakdown of structure caused by many blows from a lightweight hammer. The copper cylinders in which soil is contained are cut from 3-inch copper pipe. The inside diameter is cm. And the cylinders are cut to be cm. Long to hold 250 ml. Cylinders are fitted with lids made from sheet copper. The top lid and cylinder are numbered and stay together throughout the field and laboratory procedure. Lower lids are interchangeable and used only until the sample begins laboratory processing. A small hole is drilled into the top lid to prevent air trapping during saturation and to allow entry of air when the sample is on the tension table. The copper cylinder is slipped into the sampler after removing the sampler cutting head, which is held only by a loose friction fit. The cutting head is not tempered or specially hardened and is easily kept in shape with a carborundum stone and file. The most satisfactory cutting surface is square edged and about inch wide. A knife-like cutting edge does not cut roots as well...
