This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Wissenschaftlicher Aufsatz aus dem Jahr 2008 im Fachbereich Sprachwissenschaft / Sprachforschung (fachübergreifend), , 18 Quellen im Literaturverzeichnis, Sprache: Deutsch, Abstract: The paper discusses empirical data relating to the difficulty of verb placement patterns in German sentences. The main object of the study is to determine the degree to which Polish adults who are learning German at B1 level can acquire rules of verb position in German sentences. Research material involves texts (letters) written by Polish examinees preparing for Zertifikat Deutsch (B1). The study focuses primarily on the relationship between correct and incorrect syntactic structures that were recorded in a cross-sectional analysis. The results indicate that particular patterns of German sentences are differently obtainable to the learners. Consequently, it is possible to create a difficulty hierarchy of German sentences for Polish learners at the level that was investigated. This hierarchy does not constitute a function of L1 and L2 typological differences. Language learners produce certain developmental structures and they use specific acquisition strategies, which reflect their cognitive make-ups. Whether L1 (Polish) has a strong influence on adult...
