Excerpt from The Hospital Gazette and Archives of Clinical Surgery, 1878, Vol. 3: A Semi-Monthly Journal of Medicine and Surgery What accounts for the leucorrhoea? On the introduction of Sims speculum, we saw what is commonly called a large granular ulcer. This condition is not, however, an ulcer; it is the cervix uteri which has been entirely laid open and exposed by the laceration. To this condition is due the leucorrhoea. The fixed backache is likewise due to this cause. The exposed surface of the cervix is very tender, and in a neuralgic condition. It is in just the same state as the lower eyelid would be in a patient suffering from ectropion. It is a delicate part, and not intended to such exposure. Any irritation or inflammation produced pain in the exposed surface. The pain in the back is a reflex neuralgia transmitted to the spine. You often see the same thing in other parts of the body. The remains of an old tooth in the jaw often gives pain in the eye. About the Publisher Forgotten...
