New Educational Interest Awakened--Training Exemplified in the Drygate--New Schools Established--Exhibition in Edinburgh--Infant Schools Overdone--Mr. Stow's Caution--The Relations of Mr. Wilderspin to Mr. Stow's School--Opposition Evolves Good--Public Discussion--Mr. Stow's Granny and Leezy. Thanks to Mr. Stow, the discussion of educational questions began to blend, for the first time in Scotland--the profoundly philosophical and religious in principle, with the minutely practical in detail and application. The old routine of tasks, which was seldom or never lightened by an explanation, was unsparingly denounced. For the Bible, which had long been degraded to the drudgery of a mere reading and spelling-book, a rightfully authoritative position was demanded, and childhood was closely studied, that early training might be made more thoroughly effective. Facts were presented which the most sceptical could not set aside. Children on the lowest social level were, during school-hours, separated...
