Excerpt from A Short Outline of Danish Agriculture Through the Last Generation, Presented to British Journalists on Their Visit to Denmark in August 1919 The time from about 1880 until the outbreak of war in 1914 has for danish agriculture been a period of extraordinary and prosperous development. Before 1880 danish agriculture was mainly producer and seller of corn; but when Americas surplus production of corn in the eighties reached Europe the comprices fell rapidly and the corn-producing agriculture had to work under very difficult conditions, particularly in Denmark where the chief part of the soil, especially in Jutland but also in parts of the islands, is of so poor a quality that it only yields comparatively small crops. In stead of entering into a - from the outset hopeless - competition against the transatlantic import of corn a happy fate led danish agriculture in the quite opposite direction, and taking advantage first of the supplies of cheap corn and later of oilcakes as raw material a production of refined produces of domestic animals was taken up - especially butter and...
