If, however, rates were to be permanently increased in Lancashire, there must be a proportionate alteration in the amount of rent received by the landlords; and any increase of the facilities for borrowing would be merely a staving-off of this inevitable arrangement. As the House would have another opportunity of considering the question before the end of the Session, the Government, he thought, were not called on to commit themselves at that time to the principle of loans of public monies. Mr. BAINES: I did not say that the distress would be of brief continuance; on the contrary, I said that it would have a considerable continuance, but that ultimately a return to prosperity was certain. Mr. HENLEY said, he thought that before the Government asked the Committee to come to any decision, they ought to put before it in a plain and definite shape how much the counties in question had actually raised. Up to that time no such information had been given. The expenditure for a week, or for a given number of weeks, had been multiplied to show what the yearly amount would be at a similar rate; but what the Committee wanted was an accurate statement showing how much had been actually raised within the year, and then it could be seen what ground there was for making such an unusual application. The hon. Member for Sussex (Mr....
