Excerpt from Investigation of Concentration of Economic Power: Monograph No. 38: A Study of the Construction and Enforcement of the Federal Antitrust Laws A half century has elapsed since Congress gave expression in legislation to the American faith in free competition as a system Of economic organization and control. By this legislation, it sought to preserve competition from the extinction which threatened it. These 50 years have witnessed many changes in the American way of life and in the structure and operation of our business system. The dreaded trusts of the past century are but pygmies in comparison with our present day industrial giants. Activities subversive of competition are today conducted on a scale and under forms beyond the conception Of the framers Of the legislation Of 1890. Competition still exists, but it has been compromised by organizations, arrangements, and practices which are alien to its spirit and which impede its proper functioning. Those who have lost faith in competitive institutions attribute this failure to the allegedly mistaken purpose Of the Sherman Law. To them, competition has been tried and found wanting; they indict it as inefficient, wasteful, and Obsolete; it is an archaic system, contrived for the needs of petty trade but utterly unsuited for the highly Organized and war-strained economy Of the twentieth century. Others profess agreement with the Objectives-of the legislation which they characterize as laudable but unattainable; the Sherman Act, to their way of thinking, like national prohibition, is incapable of enforcement. Under these viewpoints the Sherman law is beyond redemption and must give way to new legislation based upon different conceptions and pointed toward different Objectives. The failure Of a statute, however, may result not from a...
