Excerpt: .Through miles of tangled scrub and bush; Till wounded, bruised and bleeding, he Wins the deep hollow of a tree Within that grave and ghostly wood Stricken of sombre solitude. And when the storm had passed away, The spirit dark that grieves, The glory of the parting day Shone down on shimmering leaves; And Loman felt the magic power, The glory of the gracious hour, When golden skies conspired to dress Nature in new-born loveliness, When every hill s high turret showed What splendour to the westward glowed--Each seemed a watch-tower in the skies The stormy march to signalise With changing glories, as the day In flaming beauty died away. Yes, Nature wildly revelled free And held him to her breast, and he In that great hour of gladness gave Love for sweet love in dreams that crave The full fruition of desire; While she...
