Excerpt from Trade and Commerce, the Auxiliaries of Civilisation and Comfort: Prepared For, and Read at the Meeting Of, the British Association, in Leeds, Oct., 1858 Compared with the world s history, the cotton trade may be regarded as having only existed during a mere atom of time. The inventor of attenuating cotton by rollers, whether Wyatt, Paul, or Arkwright, is unknown but the latter took out a patent for it, and for spinning upon the throstle, in 1767. Hargreaves, who invented the jenny, by which the attenuation was affected by mere elongation and recession, matured his machine about the same time and the talented Crompton, whose contribution of the mule gave the greatest impulse to the trade, and whose invention now chie?y fills its vast factories, only effected the alliance of the throstle with the jenny in 1787, when he completed the construction of that machine of immense merit, giving mechanical life to the laborious and beneficial mule, which then entered upon its successful and profitable career. The total number of cotton - spinning spindles in the United Kingdom may be now thirty millions, and in addition there are power looms and other machines in very great numbers, thus warranting an assumption that fifty millions sterling have been invested in the machinery and buildings of this trade in this country alone and if the capital of the auxiliary trades, as well as that requisite for carrying on this industry, be included, the total capital employed will exceed one hundred millions sterling.
