Lines of creamy foam flow up the sand and back, Leaving white flakes of shell Like scattered white rose petals, And tiny crystal jellyfish, And strands of dark sea moss, Locks of dend mermaids hair. The light comes through the fog diffused and silver gray. It is as if I stood in the heart of a moonstone. Out beyond are invisible legions of breakers Singing exultant ceaseless chants Through the fog. Eleanor Hammond. A MEMORY Of all the fragrance thy presence stirred. Of all the songs that we, together, heard, More than all else, in my mind will remain The scent of wet earth under falling rain. Mande Biirbank Harding. I USED TO PRAY Long ago I used to pray, Dropping on my knees Beside the broad old cherry bed. All night s mysteries Gathered in the angeled dark Above the roofless room. While below the Morrow lived In a chasmy tomb. Now to the cherry bed I come. Old, and very wise. If I knelt down once again Would there be surprise In height and depth of an unforget Flaming shaken day? The world is darkly troubled, and--I would like to pray. Roger L. Sergel. NIGHT PIECE Wail of the wind on a purple beach. Glint of a paddle in the moon, Hoot of an owl on a wooded hill, Crazy cry of a wandering loon! Silence--then a tremulous night Adrip...
