Excerpt from In Memoriam, Jane Chisholm, Ob. 30th Sept., 1865, Aet. 19: Sermon, Preached at West Branch East River, Pictou, on the 1st Day of October, 1865 And HE said unto them, give place; for T1111 Minx) is now dead, but sleepeth. - Matt. ix. 24. IT seems easy to comprehend this death-scene in the house of Jaiirus. In so far, at least, as some of the circumstances attending it are concerned, the event might have been one of yesterday, and the dead one of our acquaintances and friends. We can, in thought, easily cross that threshold darkened by the shadow of affliction, mingle with those mourners that have, long ages ago, slept in their turn the sleep of death, understand their sorrows, and comprehend their joys. Standing by the side of the couch where lies the lifeless maiden, we can gaze upon that brow ennobled by death calm and motionless as the chiseled marble, and more dignified and august, by far, than that of any living queen. And, as we stand by that couch and gaze upon that upturned, motionless face, resting in the strange depth of the marvellous calm of death, we certainly do feel, that throughout the ages, there is a singular sameness in the existence and causes of human sorrow, and the sources of human joy. Time, mighty though it be, is not omnipotent. Centuries, in their onward march, may lay low and lie low the works of man, but they change not the work of the Almighty. The ages, as they roll onwards, witness human customs strangely altered, but they leave human nature unchanged; The house of the ruler has long ago crumbled to decay;...
