Excerpt from Passages of a Working Life, Vol. 3: During Half a Century; With a Prelude of Early Reminiscences Hours. It is now easily performed in eighteen hours. We saw the Cathedral and the Picture Galleries, and for the first time understood, what we could never have learnt at home, how great a painter was Rubens. We reached Liege late at night, having been detained long upon the railway by the imperfect arrangements of that new mode of travelling. There was then only one line of rail from Malines, and at one station we had to wait an hour until another train from Prussia had met us and passed on. My late excellent friend the Chevalier Hebel had given us a letter or two of introduction, but we found none more valuable than a recommendation to the host of the principal inn at Aix-la - Chapelle to provide us with his best wine and his nicest apartments. We at length reached the Rhine, and saw the great Cathedral at Cologne, in which the work of restoration was then going on very slowly. We enjoyed the hospitalities of a friend at Bonn for a day or two, hearing incessant murmurs against the Prussian government. We then joined the crowd of steam boat tourists. To many of these the Rhine must have appeared monotonous. The real sense of the picturesque is not very widely diffused, even now, when people have ceased to talk about horrid rocks, as they did in the last century. The voyage up the Rhine was a somewhat tedious affair twenty years ago. Some beguiled the tedium with hock and seltzer - water some with a book some with a...
