Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Twelfth Report of the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Advisory Council: November, 1985 The death rate from cardiovascular disease in the United States has been steadily declining. From 1968 to 1978 the age-adjusted death rate (a calculated figure enabling comparisons free of the effects of age differences and other variables) declined 25 percent for coronary heart disease, 37 percent for stroke, 53 percent for hypertensive disease, and 38 percent for rheumatic heart disease. For the most part, these statistics describe the trends for adults with heart and vascular diseases. Another group of patients, with a different set of heart problems, consists of children with congenital heart disease. The problems in these children begin early in the prenatal period with abnormal development of the heart, which may result in underdeveloped or malformed heart chambers or in openings (that should have closed) between chambers. Although the number of us. Children under 17 who have cardiovascular diseases of various kinds is small in comparison to the number of adults with such diseases (about million children vs. About 47 million adults), the problems of these children should not be forgotten in the total picture of cardiovascular diseases in the United States. During the past decade, marked progress has been made in the diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of cardiovascular diseases in infants and children. This section will highlight some of the advances that have helped increase the survival of children with heart disease. In the 1950s the prognosis was virtually hopeless for many children with congenital heart disease. Almost all children with cyanotic heart disease (heart disorders in which the blood is provided with too little oxygen) died soon after birth, and...
