Oh, probably the reflection of a lantern, I said. Yes, a magic one, he replied sneeringly. I know of no more magical lantern than a man s head, I replied, a little disconcerted by his sneer. Chemists say there s more phosphorus in the brain than anywhere else; and so I sometimes think. He made no reply, but, seizing me by the coat, dragged me after him as he hurried out of the room, and, making for a back-door, led me out, bareheaded as I was, into the wood. The darkness had waxed to pitchiness, and the noises were hushed. The crows had gone to roost; and had it not been for some too-hoos of the jolly owl, sounding his horn as he rejoiced that the hated sun had gone to annoy other owls in the west, the silence would have been complete....
