Fibromyalgia, also called Fibrositis, is characterized by chronic pain and fatigue condition that can cause soreness, stiffness, and tenderness in the muscles, tendons, and joints. Although a relatively common muscular disorder, what causes the onset of the syndrome is still unknown. Meanwhile, researches are still on going for the main cause as that will help to properly understand how to manage the condition. Yes, it may be classified as rheumatic, but the truth is that, it does differ from numerous rheumatic conditions because, despite the debilitating pain in muscles and tendons, most patients who suffer from it do not develop any deformities as a result of their illness. Well, far from it, the musculoskeletal torment is genuine in every case, and can likewise be joined by weariness, mid-section torment, cerebral pain, fever, stomach torture, sleep deprivation, swollen lymph hubs, bad temper, bowels disorder and sadness. But, unlike all the development that medical studies has done in different parts for effectively fighting seriously debilitating or fatal ailments and diseases, the key cause of this has not been discovered. As a matter of fact, besides the above symptoms of the condition, there are lot of other factors which may be involved like spinal injury, genetic predisposition, prolonged stress and infection. Well, it is, however, assumed that a greater level of some nerve chemical agents and specific nerve development aspects happen in the spine with patients. So, what are the causes of Fibromyalgia Although we know that not a single cause can be attributed to Fibromyalgia at the moment, however, some researchers still believe that the development of the condition can be linked to an event like a car accident or some other...
