Congress did, however, fix the capitalization of these banks, make their organization mandatory upon the Farm Loan Board, and provide for the subscription of their initial capital by the Government. The Farm Loan Board feels positively, and in this view I concur, that the initial capital of the banks was wholly inadequate to permit their practical operation, and this fundamental defect has not as yet been overcome by the normal increase of the capital of the banks. To meet this defect, permit the steady and orderly operation of the banks, and provide for the accumulation from time to time of a sufficient volume of farm loan bonds to justify a general offering, some provision along the line of Senate bill 1837 seems essential....
