Arundell, of Wardour Castle, has undertaken that Hundred, as well as the adjoining one of Chalk. When his greater labours are over, I trust our plan will be assisted and honoured by the welltried literary and topographical abilities of my friend, Archdeacon Coxe. I still flatter myself that other coadjutors will present themselves as soon as the plan, I have now the honour to propose to my countrymen, shall have been properly digested and considered; and that, at no very distant period, I may have the heartfelt satisfaction of witnessing the progressive success of this laborious undertaking. --Pp. 3-4. The queries appended to the tract closed with the following sentence: --If I live to see the completion of this proposed undertaking, I shall review it with double satisfaction, as having been suggested by the love I bear towards my county, and being...
