Excerpt from Descriptive Portraiture of Europe in Storm and Calm: Twenty Years Experiences and Reminiscences of an American Journalist; Sketches and Records of Noted Events, Celebrated Persons and Places, National and International Affairs in France, Spain, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Belgium, Austria, Hungary Whereas it was merely jogging along as before: only now the events which had been but vaguely heard of, or told of long after they had transpired, were at once recited for the benefit. Of Americans with a minuteness and attention to detail which were not accorded them even in the countries where they took place. The cable made the appetite for Old news so keen that the American public presently found itself better informed as to what was occurring in Paris even as to the tittle-tattle of social circles than about the same class of affairs or gossip in New York or Philadelphia. The colonies of newly enriched Americans settled in London, in Paris, in Vienna, and in all the cities which, by their historic prestige or by their local charm, exercised powerful attraction upon those who had...
