NEW. 9780956720504 256 pages plus 32 glorious colour photographs of Crail. Crail in the East Neuk of Fife is celebrated as having one of the most picturesque harbours in Britain, set in a beautiful, biologically and geologically rich coastline, but less well known is Crail's long and colourful history now brought to life in this book. Trevor Smith begins by discussing the activity of pre-historic hunter-gatherers in nearby Fife Ness, then visits Constantine's and Caipie caves with their early Christian symbols and long history of human habitation. He unearths some of the oldest written references to Crail, and looks at the history of St Mary's Church, with its graveyard memorials, and the symbolism of the 8th century Pictish cross slab. The book discusses Crail's former prosperity as an international trading centre, its weekly market ratified by Robert the Bruce, and its fluctuating success as a fishing village, while emphasising the dangerous nature of the coastline with which mariners have had to contend. We witness the effects of plague and civil war...
