Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Edinburgh Medical Journal, 1864 I traced the peculiar affection of the eyes to a morbid action of the muscles of both the eyelids and eyeballs, such that the lids were held wide open and the balls protruded; and I pointed out that there was a correlative affection in the drooping lids and retracted eyeballs observed in various diseases of the nervous system. I further showed that the results of recent experimental researches enabled us to trace two kinds of this nervous exophthalmos to two sources of disordered innervation - one of these local, and dependent on morbid states of the Gasserian ganglion or its cerebral centre; the other more general, and a motor neurosis of the oculo-spinal or cilio-spinal region of the spinal cord, being that portion which extends from the first cervical to the second dorsal vertebra. I showed further that this spinal kind of exophthalmos was one of the signs of horror, terror, and pain, and, as a symptom, accompanied various cerebral neuroses, as mania and melancholia, mania with epilepsy, and insanity with general paralysis. Two classes of dorsal spinal nerves were shown to be involved in the affection, in accordance with the experiments of Claude Bernard, but both cutaneous, and both belonging to the sympathetic system, viz., the motor nerves of the bloodvessels, on the one hand, and of the cutaneous muscular tissues to which the eyelids and muscles of the eyeballs belong, on the other. I also showed that, looking thus upon the exophthalmos as a spinal neurosis, we could comprehend how it would be associated with other spinal neuroses, by extension of the functional disorder of the cord to contiguous...
