Upon the village of Camylott there had rested since the earliest peep of dawn a hush of affectionate and anxious expectancy, the very plough-boys going about their labours without boisterous laughter, the children playing quietly, and the good wives in their kitchens and dairies bustling less than usual and modulating the sharpness of their voices, the most motherly among them in truth finding themselves falling into whispering as they gossiped of the great subject of the hour. The swallows were but just beginning to stir and twitter in their nests under the eaves when I heard the horses hoofs a-clatter on the high road, said Dame Watt to her neighbour as they stood in close confab in her small front garden. Lords mercy! though I have lain down expecting it every night for a week, the heart of me leapt up in my throat and I jounced Gregory with a thump in his back to wake him from his snoring. Gregory, cries I, tis sure begun. God be kind to her young Grace this day. There goes a messenger clattering over the road. Hearken to his horses feet. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
