Excerpt from A System of Practical Therapeutics, Vol. 3: Anesthesia and Surgical Technique; Fractures and Dislocations, and Minor Surgery; Surgery of the Lungs and Pleura and of the Peritoneal Cavity, the Rectum, and Anus; Diseases of the Genito-Urinary Apparatus and Parturition and of the Puerperium The toxic action of chloroform is not confined to the respiratory centre, although its action upon this centre after prolonged anaesthesia may result in respiratory failure. It also acts upon the circulation, either directly upon the heart through the coronary arteries or through the vasomotor system, causing dilatation of the capillaries and fatal syncope, the patient's respiration failing because of the failure of sufficient blood to reach the respiratory centres. The dominant action of chloroform on tissue is depressing coming in contact with the heart, even in medicinal doses, it weakens that organ, while it lowers the vitality of the protoplasm of the respiratory centre in a ratio proportionate to the amount of the drug inhaled.
