After this array of compounds, I think the vexed question of the ingredients of Falstaffs sack must sink into insignificance. I understand that a shop is opened in the Strand, London, for the sale of these potations--one instance, at least, of a vice of civilization going eastward. We must wear it for our feather--since our drinks are the only feature of our country for which Dickens gives us unqualified praise. The life-preserving coffin, lately exhibited at the fair of the Institute, is so constructed as to fly open with the least stir of the occupant, and made as comfortable within as if intended for a temporary lodging. The proprietor recommends (which, indeed, it would be useless without) a corresponding facility of exit from the vault, and arrangements for privacy, light, and fresh air--in short, all that would be agreeable to the revenant on first waking. Not being, myself,...
