NATHAN F. TWINING, Chief of Staff of the USAF, returned from the Soviet Union on July 4, 1956, he was quoted as saying Nobody is an expert on Russia. There are just varying degrees of ignorance. A similar com ment was made by British journalist Paul Winterton during World War II, when the course and outcome of the savage combat across the steppes confounded most Western experts. If wisdom regarding Russia were proportionate to the stagger ing number of books, monographs, and articles on Soviet affairs pub lished since 1917 in English, French, and German, all literate citizens and statesmen throughout the Atlantic communities...
