Excerpt: . . . admissibility of the evidence, but as to its weight when admitted. Whether the trial judge erred in his direction to the jury that in determining the weight to be given to the opinions of these experts, they might consider whether or not the statements of Lambertson, on which those opinions were in part based, were shown to be true by other evidence, need not be considered, because if such direction was erroneous it was not an error injurious to the traction company, the present plaintiff in error. It was lastly argued that it was erroneous in the trial judge to refuse to charge certain requests respecting the condition of the motor power of the car which came into collision with the wagon of Lambertson. There is nothing in the bills of exception to indicate that it was claimed that the collision could be attributable to...
