He then most earnestly commended all to the protection of Him who is the disposer of all events. In the forward boat Col. Barton posted himself with a pole ten feet long and a handkerchief attached to the end, so that his boat might be known. They passed three British frigates and so near that they heard the sentinel s cry of all is well. By skillful maneuvering he eluded observation and gained the shore. He left a man to guard each boat and dividing his party into five divisions. Marched to the house which was one mile distant. Silently and cautiously they reached the house, Quam. The negro body servant kept close in the track of his master Conceive the situation at a short distance was a body guard, and the Bay was lined with British ships. The British senti nel to his surprise found his arms pinioned to his side, his musket seized and himself in a stern voice threatened with instant death if he made the least noise. Learning from the affrighted guard the situation of the British General s room, after having placed his men to guard against an escape. Col. Barton with his negro servant reached the door which was fastened, the negro whose head was hard as a cannon ball made one plunge, and burst through the door, Col. Barton...
