Of the underground workers 93.5 per cent were pieceworkers, and of the surface workers 69.3 per cent were paid by the shift, the pieceworkers predominating below and the time workers above ground. The hours of labor of underground mine workers are regulated by the law of June 21, 1884, which provides that the duration of the shift shall not exceed 12 hours, while the actual working time shall not exceed 10 hours. In this coal-mine district it was found that of the 38 mines investigated, the length of the shift worked by each individual worker was 8 hours in 2 mines, including the time for descending, but exclusive of that required for ascending, the shifts beginning at 6 a. m., 2 p. m., and 10 p. m. In 4 mines the regular...
