Neuware - The Third International Frontiers of Algorithmics Workshop (FAW 2009), held during June 20-23, 2009 at Hefei University of Technology, Hefei, Anhui, China, continued to provide a focused forum on current trends in research on algorithmics, including discrete structures and their applications. We aimed at stimulating the various fields for which algorithmics can become a crucial enabler, and to strengthen the ties between the Eastern and Western algorithmics research communities as well as theory and practice of algorithmics. We had three distinguished invited speakers: Guoliang Chen, Andrew Chi-Chih Yao and Frances Foong Yao, speaking on parallel computing, communication complexity and applications, and computer and network power management. The final program also included 33 peer-reviewed papers selected out of 87 contributed submissions, covering topics including approximation and online algorithms; computational geometry; graph theory and graph algorithms; games and applications; heuristics; large-scale data mining; machine learning; pattern recognition algorithms; and parameterized algorithms.
