He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shown no mercy, is a declaration nowhere more fully and forcibly exemplified than in the career of the rebellious Pharaoh. Long had the chosen people borne the galling yoke of serfdom. The day of their deliverance, when Israel's God, with an arm of omnipotence, would break the oppressor's rod and lead them forth, free and triumphant, was at hand. Mightily did He assert His sovereignty and power. He made the elements conspire to humble the Egyptians, and called upon the noisome reptile and corroding insect to avenge His own elect. He let loose foul disease from its secret lurking-place, and bade the sun withdraw its salutary light. The sacred waters crimsoned at His word, and the ripened harvest withered at His touch. The obdurate Pharaoh moved by transient fears, relents amid the terrors of storm and pestilence, but when the wrath is overpast, he buckles on defiance and rebels again. Stroke after stroke descends, melting his stony heart, as glass fused by the lightnings touch, and left more flinty than before. The plague of horrid darkness, which had enshrouded the land, fleeing at the Divine command, bore with it Pharaoh's penitence. There remained but one more judgment.
