Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Food Balances in Foreign Countries, Vol. 2: Estimates for 12 Countries in the Far East The Far East, excluding Mainland China, has more than 850 million people or about 30 percent of the world's population. It is predominantly agricultural. Nearly 70 percent of the people are dependent on agriculture for their livelihood. Output per person is low because farms are small and the scientific and mechanical advances made in the West have been applied only in a limited way in this part of the world. Certain commercial crops such as rubber, cotton, and tobacco are grown with advantage, but emphasis is on the production of subsistence crops. About 85 percent of the total agricultural output consists of food crops; this proportion remains virtually unchanged from prewar. Domestic food production is supplemented by substantial net imports of food grains averaging about 10 million tons annually in recent years. This is a considerable share of the total world trade, and compares with net exports of almost 3 million tons prewar. Nevertheless, it is less than 5 percent of the food consumption in the region. With low per capita output of food and of products that can be traded for food, consumption levels are low. Average food consumption for the region as a whole, in terms of energy value, is estimated at only calories per person per day, or well below the average for most other underdeveloped regions, including Western Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Variation among countries within the Far East is relatively slight—from about in Pakistan to somewhat more than in Japan, Taiwan, and Singapore. Variation within countries is almost certain to be much greater. The composition of the...
