High-Rise Database-Assisted Design 1.1 HRDAD1.1 Concepts, Software, and Examples

By U. S. Department Of Commerce

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 66 pages. Dimensions: 11.0in. x 8.5in. x 0.1in. This report documents the changes that have been made to the previous structure of the HRDAD software, thereby developing the program HRDAD1.1 capable of calculating efficiently the response of large scale real world tall buildings made up of many thousands of members. In particular the following upgrades on the previous software have been implemented: (1) Capability of performing time-domain calculations, requiring times of the order of hours, of the peak demand in each member of a real size structure (estimated time for the previous version of HR DAD on an AMD Athlon 64 processor 3000 with 512MB was on the order of weeks); (2) Include as output of the software the peak demand of global response parameters such as inter-story drift and top floor acceleration for any number of column lines and locations on the top floor (3) Allow time histories of floor displacements and top floor accelerations to be saved for selected wind directions and speeds; (4) Implement a general input format for the wind tunnel information obtained by Synchronous Multi-Pressure Sensing System measurements, therefore allowing for easy...
