Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from New Essays Towards a Critical Method Of the following essays those on Poe Shelley Clough, and the art of Keats and Burns were written before the idea of a general Critical Method had been at all formally developed by the author. Each was a spontaneous attempt, made over ten years ago, to arrive by comparison and inference at a reasoned opinion on a critical issue over which there had been much dispute; and they are now revised and collected in the hope that, though in the past ten years our critical disputes have mostly turned on other topics, these discussions may still have an interest for readers who have not yet satisfied themselves that the old questions are disposed of. The principles involved are a permanent ground of discussion, and doubtless the poets of the past will yet be disputed over afresh. It will readily be seen that no one of the studies named, except perhaps that on Poe, comes near applying all the tests mentioned in the preliminary essay on The Theory and Practice of Criticism as proper to a critical inquiry. They rather represent detached investigations in which a view of the nature of the necessary tests is arrived at.
