Excerpt from Trading With Australasia We have made rapid strides in building up commercial relations with Australia in the past year, yet the people of the United States know little about the vast resources of the island continent, a country larger than the United States, excluding Alaska, and with a population less than that of New York City. We have only a vague conception of its millions of acres of grazing lands - in a climate which permits the stock to feed on the natural pastures the year round and of its enormous tracts suitable for the growing of practically all agricultural products, such as wheat, alfalfa, oats, rye, sugar cane, bananas and pineapples, and other tropical fruits. In 1913 Australia bought German goods valued at 35, 000, 000, and the United States sold her only 25, 000, 000. In the year ending June 30, 1919, American exports to Australia amounted to 109, 000, 000, there being of course no German exports during the war. Sentiment against the Germans is still very strong in Australia, and the United States will probably import a large share of the commodities formerly sent to Germany. Before the war British exports to Australia amounted to about 250, 000, 000 yearly, and the principal exports from Australia - wool, gold, wheat, meat, hides, and skins - were shipped to the English market.
