Excerpt from A Handbook of Common Garden Pests: Designed for the Thousands of Pennsylvania Amateur Gardeners Aiding Our Government in the Great War Most important to the grower is a knowledge of how an insect pest secures its food, whether by chewing and swallowing bits of plant food, or by piercing and sucking out the plant juices, or lapping up liquids. Chewing insects are controlled by sprays of arsenic compounds, but sucking insects must be hit with a contact spray of corrosive or oily nature for killing effect. Special uses of poisons and formulae are discussed later. Plant diseases are caused by bacteria, slime-moulds or fungi, which attack the tissues and interfere with the growth and reproduction of plants. Sometimes moisture or soil conditions produce harmful results which simulate genuine diseases. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
