PARSON BUSTA BAGAFYAH: NAAH RAMP WID WICKEDNESS (PAPERBACK)

Jacqueline Harriott, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This story, Parson Busta Bagafyah, written mostly in play form, takes readers back to an era of early post-colonial Jamaica. This is a very hilarious comedy with a strong grassroots undertone, but carries a powerful message of salvation. The reader will be cognitively whisked away to a small community on the edge of Kingston: a place struggling with bruising social and economic ills, just like many other places on the island. A fiery, no nonsense preacher, armed with a new dose of the Holy Ghost, after being abroad for a few years returns home with an undeterred motivation to put an end to the ole eap a slackness. Most of the residents are poor, others are flourishing while a few have arrived and enjoying life on the best side of the tracks. Largely through his ministry, a convergence of all social levels is quite evident, with interesting and entertaining results. We see this clearly when we meet Mrs. Uptina Perfecta, a wealthy and arrogant native who lived in Europe for many years, travels down the dirt tracks to Marlene's home. After an unplanned firing of her maid, she gives out her clothes to be laundered by this poor, dejected woman, Marlene. While picking up her laundry from outside Marlene's one room house, down the lane, she encounters not only Marlene, but also her news-carrying and flourishing friend, Dezrene. Just before she arrives, both friends have a very brassy exchange of words; as Marlene expresses her woes about her life of crushing poverty, which is greatly complicated by single parenthood. Most pressing is her strange urge of wanting to make peace with her Maker and turn her life around. Dezrene finds this stirring...
