The tinkling sound of drowsy bells Comes down the breezy steep, As cattle, clustered at the wells, Move in their dreamless sleep. The valleys, sweeping to the west, Are rich with harvest gold; And tasseled corn crowns each low crest Against the blue sky rolled. The plowman guides his patient team. Where, in the weeks gone by, The bearded wheat was all a gleam Beneath the mellow sky. Down sloping hills the swallows dart, And skim the shining pool, Where fragrant, creamy lilies part The waters deep and cool. O faultless days of sea and sun, Of rest and bloom and song, Of purple peaks, whose heights are won By wood-paths, never long, How like a dream of heaven you are, When in life's toil and fret You light the memory, like a star In distant darkness...
