Excerpt: . . . BULGABIA. The Bulgarians speak one of the numerous Slavonic languages; the old Bulgarian is the ancient Slave, into which were translated, in the ninth century, the canonical books of the Old and New Testaments, which are to this day in use in the Slavonic churches of the Greek denomination. The Bulgarians settled in the country which they now inhabit during the fifth, sixth, and seventh centuries of the Christian era. They were for along time at war with the emperors of the Eastern Empire. Now conquerors, and now tributaries of this empire, they almost always maintained their independence, forming either a kingdom more or less important, or else a province enjoying a more or less extensive autonomy. The Bulgarians embraced the Christian religion in the year 864, in the reign of their King Boris. Their apostles were the two brothers of Salonica, Cyril and...
