Excerpt: . chapter ii. the natural features, the natural history, and the indian period. Special Authorities; Mr. J. H. Sears of Salem, Mass., Prof V. J. McGee of Washington, D. C. geology. byfield is a good place to take lessons in geology. Long Hill is a characteristic drumlin; that is, a long, high, smooth, unstratified hill of glacial origin. It is over a mile long, two hundred feet above the sea, and one hundred feet above the adjacent ground. It bears a silent but potent witness to the might of the ancient sheet of ice that once enveloped all the region. The great glacier towered possibly thousands of feet above it, and the hill was the deposit of the drift that was borne along in its lower portion. What was known as Rye plain when the parish was set off, or the region of Warren Street, has, in Mr. Witham s land and thereabouts, interesting kettle holes. These are deep, circular depressions. Mr. Sears pronounces Rye plain an overwash of post-glacial sand, that is, it was deposited in the period of abounding waters and floods which resulted from the melting of glaciers. These kettle holes are supposed to mark spots where the rushing floods swirled around some detached mass of ice, and so scooped out deep, crater-like hollows. Between Warren Street and Long Hill are extensive peat meadows. Peat is a kind of half-made coal. Most of the young are unfamiliar with it, but those...
