Excerpt from The South American Wars of Independence The independence of South America from Spanish and Portuguese rule Was the natural result of the French and American revolutions. The colonial policy of the Peninsular countries was not of a nature to make loyal subjects out of the latin-americans. The country was taxed to the last penny until finally the revolts at Quito and Charcas in 1809 aroused the Spanish throne to the needs of their American possessions. A royal decree on January 22 1809 announced that the colonies were an integral part of the monarchy and as provinces were entitled to direct representation in the Cortes. A year later however the Regency at Cadiz abolished this liberal ordinance with the result that the revolutionary spirit spread through the continent. During 1810 revolts occurred in Caracas, Bogota, Quito, Buenos Ayres, Montevideo, Chili and Upper Peru (now Bolivia), Paraguay, Peru and Brazil remained peaceful. 7 The overthrow of Spanish rule in America is the results of two simultaneous movements which originated in local disturbances in Venezuela and Buenos Ayres which spread gradually northward and so southward along the western coast of the continent developing leaders as they advanced and which finally united within the limits of the present republic of Ecuador to continue the advance together into the heights of Upper Peru until the attainment of a complete and perfect independence - Paxson - Independence of the South American Republics.
