I asked my mother once who her grandfather was and she did not know. I asked my father the same question and he could not tell me. This first started me in my genealogical research some twenty-five years ago, and the following pages are the result. I know they are far from complete, but such as they are I cheerfully add them to the vast fund of human knowledge collected by those who have gone before me in the hope that they may be a steppingstone to some one coming after who may want to know who their grandfather was. No one who has not entered on the same task can realize the amount of labor involved, and yet it has not been without its compensation. I have seen places I never would have thought of visiting; I have met people that...
