Excerpt from Longstreet's Charge at Gettysburg, Pa: Pickett's, Pettigrew's and Trimble's Divisions; Historical Essay The point at which the troops with me struck the enemy's works projected farthest to the front. I recollect well, my horse having been shot, I leaned my elbow upon one of the guns of the enemy to rest, and watched with painful anxiety the fight on Pickett's right, for on their success meant the tenableness of our position. Surrounding me were soldiers of Trimble's, of Pettigrew's and of Pickett's division, and it required all the resources at my command to prevent their following en masse the retreating enemy, and some did go so far that when we were compelled to withdraw they were unable to reach our lines, the enemy closing in from the right and left. We remained in quiet and undisputed possession of the enemy's work, the men, pushed with victory, eager to press forward. Col. S. G. Shepard, of Seventh Tennessee regiment, commanding Archer's Brigade, says. About the Publisher Forgotten...
