Excerpt from General Fluid Equations This is the first in a series of notes on various topics in magneto-hydrodynamics. A large part of this material has been presented in informal lectures at irregular intervals since 1950. A set of four mimeo graphed notes, representing some of the early developments, was issued in July 1950 with the purpose of acquainting a small group at nyu with certain aspects of the subject. Although many of these reports are unconnected, an attempt will be made to supply enough background material to make the series to some degree self-contained. The status of the subject of magneto-hydrodynamics is somewhat paradoxical. It involves in combination, various aspects of fluid dynamics, electromagnetic theory, kinetic theory, and occasionally relativity. Most of this was available to Maxwell and he had the material to develop the subject to a considerable extent, but only recently has it been attacked significantly. Another.
