HEY, BUG DOCTOR THE SCOOP ON INSECTS IN GEORGIAS HOMES AND GARDENS

University of Georgia Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 232 pages. Dimensions: 8.0in. x 5.9in. x 0.6in. Bugs can sometimes really . . . bug you. On the flip side, they pollinate crops, provide food for birds and other wildlife, produce honey and other useful things, and serve as bellwether indicators of our environments health. Thats to say nothing of aesthetic worth. Iridescent dragonflies weaving patterns of light as they patrol a lakeshore, a ghostly luna moth drifting through the dusk-encounters like these enrich our lives enormously. Thats what Hey, Bug Doctor! is all about: appreciating that the difference between a pesky and a helpful bug often comes down to how, when, and where you find it. Few of us realize that better than entomologist Jim Howell, who is known to readers of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution through his helpful, humorous columns on getting along with bugs. Gathered here are Howells profiles of over sixty crawling and flying (and yes, biting and stinging) bugs commonly found in homes, gardens, and yards in Georgia and around the Southeast. Each illustrated profile describes the bugs appearance, diet, behavior, and impact on the natural and built environments. Like Howells widely read newspaper columns, the profiles offer unusual facts, popular myths, and stories of real-life encounters. A single square yard of your lawn or garden can contain hundreds, even thousands, of bugs. Here is proven, practical guidance on those beautiful, ugly, harmless, toxic, and ultimately amazing creatures with which you share your home and yard. LAWN AND GARDEN INSECTS Doodlebugs: Part of Rural Americana Fire Ants: A Double Whammy of Pain Luna Moths: Charming Guests in Your Garden Fireflies: Fairy Lanterns in the Backyard RELATIVES Spider Mites: Nasty in Hot, Dry Weather Golden Garden Spiders: Welcome This Web Weaver to Feast in Your Garden Chiggers: Oooooohhh, Those Itchy Redbugs Ticks: Dont Get Ticked with Warm Spring Weather HOUSEHOLD...
