MINE DETECTION: ARMY DETECTORS ABILITY TO FIND LOW-METAL MINES NOT CLEARLY DEMONSTRATED: NSIAD-96-198

Bibliogov. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 28 pages. Dimensions: 9.7in. x 7.4in. x 0.1in. Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed the Armys development of a portable land mine detector, focusing on: (1) how the Armys ANPSS-12 mine detector performed in detecting low-metallic mines in procurement tests; (2) the nature of the land mine threat in Bosnia-Herzegovina; and (3) the mine detectors potential effectiveness in Bosnia. GAO found that: (1) the Army has not clearly demonstrated the ability of its ANPSS-12 mine detector to detect low metallic mines; (2) the detector performed poorly during operational testing and failed to meet the Armys 92-percent detection requirement against low metallic mines; (3) although both candidate detectors performed equally well after the Army removed low metallic targets from the procurement tests, the Army selected the ANPSS-12 because of its lower price; (4) the detectors field accuracy is questionable, since the Army did not sufficiently control other environmental and operating factors that can affect detector performance; (5) the detectors usefulness in Bosnia may be limited because about 75 percent of the buried mines have a low metallic content; (6) although the detectors reported performance in Bosnia is good, the Army has limited the detectors use there; (7) the Air Force has warned its personnel in Bosnia that the detector is not sufficiently sensitive to low metallic mines and some countries have switched to other mine detectors; and (8) the Army has reduced its reliance on the detector through alternative threat-reduction practices, such as extensive personnel training in mine awareness, avoiding or carefully selecting routes through suspected mine fields, and using heavy equipment to clear paths.
