Excerpt: .once more the situation that confronted as indeed it still confronts vegetation. You recall that as to New York we are dealing with a glaciated terrain. This glaciation effect is expressed in areas of bare, polished rock on the one hand and basins occupied by lakes on the other; in deposits of coarse boulders--particularly glacial moraines--in some quarters and in delta sand plains in others; in former valleys and streamways blocked by glacial filling; in accumulation of glacial till laid down upon hills and valleys; in sand beds of weathered rock covering the granite base over much of the Adirondacks; in mounds and ridges of till--the drumlins, kames, etc.; in well drained deposits of fairly constant moisture content, or too well drained and therefore periodically deficient in moisture (sand, and gravel beds) or in lowlands habitually flooded or with the water table at or near...
