GRIN Verlag GmbH. Paperback. Condition: New. 24 pages. Dimensions: 10.0in. x 7.0in. x 0.1in. Seminar paper from the year 2011 in the subject American Studies - Literature, grade: 2, 0, Martin Luther University, language: English, comment: Kommentar des Dozenten: Good observations, but individual sections need to be tied more closely to the main thesis. , abstract: Introduction: The South, particularly the rural South, was a central aspect in Faulkners writings, for he belonged to the South himself. He even constructed a fictitious country, commonly known as Yoknapatawpha, which provides the setting of numerous of his stories. It served as a lens through which he could examine the traditions, practices and attitudes that had divided and united the people of the South. Faulkner was mostly interested in exploring the moral allusions of history. As the South emerged from the Civil War and Reconstruction period, the people were often torn between a new and an older, more established world order. Most of the time, the culture of the South was inward-turning, backward-looking and frozen in its virtues (Warren 244). This offered an image of massive immobility, while people were fixed on moral values and gentility at the same time. Faulkner wrote about this unchangeableness and ideas of Southern gentility, in a sometimes sarcastic way. He literally attacked the way of thinking by introducing a modern writing style, which included complex and heavily loaded sentences, as well as the stream-of-consciousness technique that disregards chronology of events. Thus, why did the South fail to adjust to modernity? The Sound and the Fury is considered to be an absolute classic of modernity. In this paper, Faulkners novel The Sound and the Fury and the short story A Rose for Emily will be analysed, searching for reasons to the problem of adjusting to modernity. Therefore, I will...
