Production of Gasoline by Cracking Heavier Oils (Classic Reprint) (Paperback)

By E W Dean

Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Production of Gasoline by Cracking Heavier Oils The ordinary processes of refining crude petroleum yield a series of products differing widely in properties and commercial desirability. Those required for the smaller types of internal combustion engines, such as are now generally used in airplanes, motor boats, farm tractors, motor trucks, and automobiles, are in greatest demand. Kerosene and fuel oil, which are used to produce light, heat, or power in competition with other more plentiful resources, such as coal, are less desirable with regard both to commercial profit and the conservation of natural resources. Of the two types of products used in internal combustion engines lubricants and gasoline - the former does not seem as yet to offer a problem in the conservation of resources. Gasoline is, however, being produced in such quantities that its continued use on the present scale threatens to bring about the practical exhaustion of the country's underground supply of crude petroleum in the course of a few generations at most. The Bureau of Mines knows of no more important...
