

Stroke Victims Have Rights, All About Strokes and Recovery

By Marlys J Waters

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 210 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.5in. Stroke victims have rights. When they are most vulnerable right after the stroke, friends and family need to make sure your loved one is allowed to fight the battle to regain their lost abilities. They may not be able to talk or to swallow, they may be completely paralyzed on one side, they may have some temporary memory or emotional issues, and even their eyesight may be affected for awhile. However the majority of stroke victims want to fight to regain what they have lost, they want to have the chance to return to their former life or a facsimile of one. They might even be satisfied to return to a different life where running marathons is not required. Many stroke victims who where the most severally disabled and suffering from all the indignities of the disorder reclaim most of their prior skills and add a few new ones. Their mental powers of thought and personality are usually less affected than their obvious physical losses. It is those mental powers that create great authors and advocates for the disabled. They...
