Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Assassin: A Tragedy in Four Acts Harold. Did you see his face? Was it not wonderful? Joe. His face? Of course I saw it. What should I be looking at, his uniform? Not but I saw that, too. He wears more gold of late. Harold. His face was noble; set with high resolve. Joe. A mask to cover his ambition up. Come, let's to work. Hold you this steady. Harold. (still gazing into space.) I never can forget that face. It bore the dignity of other worlds. Joe. For my part I would rather see it in the fight, blackened with powder-smoke, and torn with fury. I like not warriors when they turn toward peace. Harold. He is our great dictator. Joe. Emperor, you should be saying. Harold. I do not fear the word. He is our emperor. Joe. Fools tongues are quick familiar with new words. Here, look at what you do. Harold. I see him there, so stately, mild, and calm, turning from fate of war to faith of peace. Joe. Were better you should see this nail I'm driving. You're less apt to come out with a damaged thumb. As for heroes, if that's what you've come to the city to see, why, you will have them on this stage in the course of an hour; just as big heroes as your Emperor, too. Did I not tell you, you would see Philip legrand? Harold. My father has often preached against the stage. Joe. As I have Often preached against your mother for marrying your father. Still, she did well enough. Harold. And, yet, I have Often longed to...
